

Zafer Yorgancı

CREATIVE TECHNOLOGIST, FILMMAKER, DOCUMENTARY PHOTOGRAPHER

Zafer Yorgancı (born 1993, Istanbul, Turkey) is a multidisciplinary creative technologist, documentary filmmaker, and 3D artist shaping digital media, software architecture, and visual storytelling since 2012.

Biography & Roots

Raised in Istanbul, Yorgancı studied graphic design and worked professionally in visual communication. Driven by a passion for cinema and social documentary, he pursued intensive film and screenwriting courses, focusing his lens on human rights, refugee experiences, and the working class.

In 2016, Yorgancı gained international acclaim as one of twelve photographers from Turkey selected for the #BridgingStories collective, mentored by National Geographic's John Stanmeyer. Their work was exhibited globally across Turkey, France, and Armenia, and featured in The New York Times. A global photobook followed in 2017, and his contributions were archived in 2018 by the International Centre for Photojournalism (CIP) in France.

Expanding into cinema, Yorgancı edited and cinematographed independent shorts. In 2015, he directed his debut documentary, "The Dispossessed," winning a Jury Special Award. His academic path culminated in a degree in Creative Media – 3D Animation & VFX in 2021 with the EU-funded short film "Frames."
